Between 1880 and 1930, Europe was convulsed by wars, technological advances, and social transformations of all kinds. Writers and other artists responded by creating revolutionary new forms, techniques, and movements, e.g. Post-impressionism, Expressionism, Cubism, Futurism, Vorticism, Imagism, Dadaism, Surrealism... These and other strains of Modernism carried philosophical attitudes, political positions, and aesthetic ideas and practices to authors all over the 20th-century world. We will read works by a variety of writers to see why and how they received, rejected, and/or recombined central aspects of European Modernism.
