Hi everyone! Since graduating from Oberlin in 2003, I’ve been keeping myself busy in any number of ways. My career is ostensibly in education, though I tend to see everything as education-related and so do work that reaches far beyond schools. Geographically, I’ve gone from Oberlin to Reno, Nevada, to Philadelphia to Charlottesville, West Virginia, to a cabin in the woods of northern Minnesota (where I grew up). Educationally, I’ve earned my motorcycle license, learned to play the accordion, snagged a master’s from Penn, and am now finishing up a doctorate there as well. You’ll never guess what I study: ombuds and how conflict helps organizations learn! I’ve also started a company along the way called Collegocity(.com), which helps families and school groups make good visits to college campuses as part of the college search. I continue to be grateful for and humbled by my OCDC experience, which I truly feel I (try to!) put to use almost every day of my life.
