Currently, Anita Ofori-Addo is an epidemiologist at the Michigan Department of Community Health (MDCH). Prior to joining MDCH, Anita worked as a surveillance epidemiologist at the Florida Department of Health. She also taught chemistry and physical science at a private high school in Jacksonville, Florida. Anita graduated from Oberlin with a degree in biochemistry in 2006 and obtained her Master of Public Health degree in epidemiology from Emory University in Atlanta, Georgia. Anita now lives in Lansing, Michigan, with her husband, Jojo, and will be starting medical school in the fall. She comes from Accra, Ghana.

Anita became an OCDC member in 2005. OCDC equipped her with the skills necessary to talk about and address social justice issues. In the workplace and at school, people always turn to Anita for help with interpersonal conflicts, trusting that she will help them come up with their own solution to the issue at hand. Anita is able to help in a nonpartial manner, thanks to the training she received as an OCDC member at Oberlin.
