

Jerome Davis Student Research Fund

Honors students and other advanced students (except Senior Scholars) engaged in research projects are invited to apply for support from The Jerome Davis Research Fund. These awards are designed to defray research costs of projects in the social sciences, and well defined topics focusing on or having implications for the community (broadly defined). Students can apply for reimbursement for research already undertaken*, but need to submit receipts with the application. Normally, awards will not exceed $1000 and may be used for expenses related to *interviewing, supplies, equipment rental, etc. These funds are not for the purchase of equipment and rarely does the fund pay for books. This award does not fund the photocopying of honors theses. Department advances or reimbursement requests will not be funded. The work should result in a research paper on a community related topic. Competition for the awards will be held fall and spring semester.
