WAYS ARCHAEOLOGICAL STUDIES MAJORS RISE

RESEARCH:
- Hydrology and Terracing in the Monte Pallano area of Abruzzo, Italy
- Mapping Mikt’sqaq Angayuk: A GIS Analysis of a Nineteenth-Century Sod House
- The Role of Millet in Pre-Roman Italy
- The Tomb of Ny-ankh-nesut
- Documenting Oberlin’s Native Arctic Collection
- The Karanis Housing Project: An Interactive Map of the University of Michigan Excavations at Karanis, Egypt

INTERNSHIPS:
- In addition to class work, the program offers archaeological fieldwork and laboratory research opportunities for students, which may include participation in Oberlin faculty research or in field schools, internships, or other arrangements outside of Oberlin.
- University of Pennsylvania, University Museum

STUDY AWAY:
- Oberlin-in-London 2019, Earth Science and Material Culture
- Intercollegiate Center for Classical Studies in Rome, Italy
- The School for Field Studies, Tropical Island Biodiversity Studies, Panama
- University College London Institute of Archeology, England

EXPERIENTIAL LEARNING:
- Students have frequently worked with a number of collections of archaeological materials housed at Oberlin, including art and artifacts in the Allen Memorial Art Museum, the Herbert May Collection in the religion department, artifacts in the Department of Anthropology, and archival material in Special Collections in Mudd Library.
- Oberlin College partners with the College of Wooster to manage a local chapter of the Archaeological Institute of America (AIA). The AIA provides two national lecturers each year to supplement the two college’s other sponsored events, workshops, and lectures.

FIRST DESTINATIONS OF RECENT ARCHEOLOGY MAJORS:
- Graduate School: University of Cincinnati; Brown University; University of Michigan; University of California, Berkeley; University College of London
- Positions: Integration engineer, Epic Systems; Arkansas Archaeological Survey; contract specialist at YRCI Management Consulting, Va.; Fulbright Scholar; field inventory specialist, TEI Biosciences, Mass.; college coach, College Possible, Pa.; City Year Cleveland

CONTACT:
Professor Drew Wilburn, chair: awilburn@oberlin.edu; Professor Amy Margaris: amargaris@oberlin.edu