WAYS CLASSICS MAJORS RISE

RESEARCH:
- If These Walls Could Talk: Elevating Latin Love Elegy in Pompeian Graffiti
- Shadows of Teutoburg: How the Intertextual Germanicus Signals the Fall of Res Publica in Tacitus’ Annales
- Agriculture of Early Iron Age Greece: Civilization and Social Structures
- Narratorial Voice and the Self in Propertius Book 4
- Student-faculty collaborative research projects include Creating a Commentary for Seneca’s Natural Questions, Book VI, and The Karanis Housing Project: An Interactive Map of the University of Michigan Excavations at Karanis, Egypt

INTERNSHIPS:
- National Museum of Women in Arts, Washington, DC
- University of Pennsylvania, University Museum
- Morgantina Archaeological Project, Aidone, Italy

STUDY AWAY:
- Oberlin-in-London, Spring 2017: History of Medicine, Cancer, Magic
- Intercollegiate Center for Classical Studies in Rome (ICCS), Rome, Italy
- Oxford-St. Catherine’s College, Oxford, England
- College Year in Athens, Semester and Academic Year Program, Greece

EXPERIENTIAL LEARNING:
- Winter term in Greece, led by Professor Kirk Ormand
- Students learn from visiting scholars through the Charles Beebe Martin Classical Lecture, an annual series that ranks among the most distinguished in the field of classics in the United States.
- Outside the classroom, students hone language and research skills by visiting Special Collections in the main library to peruse Byzantine manuscripts or Greek papyri.
- The Allen Memorial Art Museum has a collection of ancient Greek and Roman art, as well as works from the Renaissance and later that reflect the classical tradition.

FIRST DESTINATIONS OF RECENT CLASSICS MAJORS:
- Positions: Our students have pursued careers in library science, museum curation and education, project management, and many other professions. Examples include business manager at Norton Publishing; product management specialist III at Thermo Fisher Scientific; editor at the Minnesota Historical Society; information specialist at Vertex Pharmaceuticals; director of recruitment at Teach for America; senior associate producer at MTV; museum coordinator at American Bookbinders Museum in San Francisco; and crisis services supervisor at National Runaway Safeline in Chicago.
- Graduate School: Our students attend law school, medical school, and business school and pursue graduate study in classics at Yale; University of Chicago; Bryn Mawr; University of California, Berkeley; University of Texas, Austin; Princeton University; University of Cincinnati; University of Michigan; and University of Pennsylvania. Specific degrees include an MFA at Northwestern and a PhD in Classical and Ancient Studies at Ohio State.