WAYS ECONOMICS MAJORS RISE

RESEARCH:
Sample research conducted by our majors in our capstone and honors seminars:
• Induced Earthquakes and House Prices: Evidence from Oklahoma (published in academic journal)
• Does a College Education Eliminate Existing Socioeconomic Stratification? An Analysis of College Attainment and Intergenerational Mobility
• T.REX vs. Denver: The Socio-Economic Impacts of Denver’s Transportation Expansion Project
• The Transmission of U.S. Monetary Policy Shocks to Small Open Economies: The Role of Small Open Economy’s Short-Term Interest Rate Exchange Rate
• Winter-term Albert Rees Policy Fellowships
• Our faculty members hire about 30 students each year as paid research assistants.

INTERNSHIPS:
• U.S. Department of the Treasury, Washington, DC
• Elizabeth Park Capital Management, Cleveland
• Volpe National Transportation Systems Center, Boston
• Federal Reserve Bank of Cleveland, Cleveland
• BNP Paribas, New York
• Frontier Strategy Group, Washington, DC

STUDY AWAY:
• Business and Culture, Barcelona, Spain
• The Swedish Program, Stockholm, Sweden
• Waseda University, Tokyo, Japan
• Center for University Programs Abroad, Paris, France

EXPERIENTIAL LEARNING:
• All economics majors take a senior capstone seminar, where they develop an original piece of research. Using the Social Science Data Lab, students collect data and use econometric software to answer their question.
• Oberlin Business Scholars and the Peoples Bank Case Competition
• Bloomberg terminals allow for detailed, real-time analysis of equities, bonds, and economic indicators in class.
• In our Danforth-Lewis Seminar Series and Financial Lecture Series, students learn from researchers, policymakers, and business professionals. Faculty members present their research in progress in the Economics Brown Bag.
